Some Former Tubercular Children, Once Excluded.

They're back at their work today the 60,000 or more school children of the District, after a holiday declared three days before Christmas and which extended through the Yuletide season. They were sleepy-eyed and tired, as a result of their New Year celebrations last night, and but few were anxious to gather up books and return to their desks today. But they did it, nevertheless.

The teachers expected to get but little actual work from the sudents today, realizing that fond memories of Christmas and of the holidays just ended would distract their minds for a.while. Consequently they bore with them through the day. Tomorrow, however, will be another day, and different things are expected of them. Among those returning to their studies today were many who had been excluded in the past because of tuberculosis, and who had not, until recently, proved that their bodies had ridded themselves of the disease
